

Dr Alistair Mokoena Bio

Dr Alistair Mokoena is an international keynote speaker and a Chartered Marketer with 27 years blue chip corporate experience. Some of his previous roles include Unilever Brand Manager, SABMiller Marketing Manager, Absa Head of Marketing, Ogilvy South Africa Chief Executive Officer and Google South Africa Country Director. He's the author of a self-effectiveness book called "Servings of self-mastery" which was featured in Exclusive Books' prestigious HomeBru Campaign in May 2024.

He is currently an Extraordinary Professor of Practice at the North-West University Business School, and visiting faculty at local and international business schools including the University of Oxford Said Business School. He has published many articles, presented conference papers, reviewed and co-authored numerous books. His academic qualifications include Bcom, LLB, MDP (Management Development Programme), EDP (Executive Development Programme), MBA, PhD, and he is in the process of completing a DBA (Doctor of Business Administration).

He has received many industry awards over the years including the Global Brands Magazine's Best Advertising and Marketing Leader Award in South Africa (2019), North-West University's Alumni Excellence Award for Business Leadership (2023), a Finalist in the IMM (Institute of Marketing Management) Marketing Excellence Awards (2023) and Rhodes University Distinguished Alumni Award (2024).

Dr Mokoena is also a philanthropist. In March 2024 he established the Dr Alistair Mokoena Education Fund at Rhodes University, North-West University and the University of Johannesburg which supports students that cannot afford university fees. He is passionate about bridging the digital divide and is an advocate for the role that responsible Artificial Intelligence can play in making the United Nations' 17 Sustainable Development Goals a reality in our lifetime.