Koketso Sachane

BROADCASTER. JOURNALIST. STORYTELLER. CONVERSATION MAKER.

Positioning:

Koketso Sachane is a broadcaster, journalist and storyteller who has spent more than two decades listening to, questioning and helping shape South Africa's public conversation.

His signature question is:

WHO SHAPES THE SOUTH AFRICAN STORY?

Because the story of a country is never simply told. It is contested. It is remembered. It is inherited. And ultimately, it is ours to shape.

1. Professional biography

1.1 Comprehensive Biography

Koketso Sachane is a broadcaster, journalist, storyteller, moderator and dialogue facilitator who has spent more than two decades listening to, questioning and helping shape South Africa's public conversation.

His career has traversed some of the country's most influential media platforms, including Bush Radio, Heart 104.9 FM, Kaya FM, 702 and Cape Talk. He currently hosts The Meeting Point on SAFM, where he engages political leaders, academics, business leaders, civil society activists, artists, community voices and ordinary South Africans on the issues that define the country and its future.

But Koketso's work has always been about more than broadcasting the news. His particular strength lies in asking the question beneath the headline — finding the human story inside the political story, the social consequence inside the policy debate, and the deeper question inside the public argument.

Over more than 20 years, he has developed a distinctive ability to make complex and often contested issues accessible without diminishing their complexity. His conversations move between politics and culture, governance and citizenship, leadership and identity, social justice and everyday life.

His experience extends beyond the newsroom and studio. Koketso has worked at senior communications level in both government and the tourism sector, serving as spokesperson to the Western Cape MEC for Transport and Public Works, spokesperson to the Minister of Public Works, and Communications Manager at South African Tourism. These experiences have given him a rare perspective from both sides of public communication — as the person asking the questions and as the person responsible for communicating institutions, policy and public purpose.

He is the founder of House of Sachane, a strategic narrative, media and dialogue practice built around the belief that the quality of our conversations matters. House of Sachane creates platforms that bring together storytelling, public affairs, culture, broadcasting and live dialogue.

At the heart of Koketso's work is a question that increasingly informs his speaking and public engagements:

Who owns the South African story?

Who gets to tell the story of the country? Whose experiences become part of the national narrative? Which voices are amplified and which disappear? And, perhaps most importantly, what responsibility do we have for the story we leave to the generation that comes after us?

These questions underpin his keynote work, public conversations and cultural projects, including A Letter to Sobukwe.

Koketso speaks on leadership, citizenship, democracy, media, storytelling, South African identity, social cohesion, public discourse and the responsibility of shaping the narratives through which societies understand themselves.

Whether delivering a keynote, moderating a panel, facilitating a difficult conversation or sitting across from a guest for a fireside dialogue, Koketso brings the same approach that has defined his broadcasting career: listen carefully, ask better questions and create the conditions for a conversation that matters.

His work is ultimately about more than communication.

It is about helping us have better conversations about who we are, where we are going and what kind of country we want to leave behind.

1.2 Short Biography

Koketso Sachane is a South African broadcaster, journalist, storyteller, moderator and dialogue facilitator with more than 20 years' experience at the centre of the country's public conversation.

He currently hosts The Meeting Point on SAFM and has worked across some of South Africa's leading radio platforms, including Bush Radio, Heart 104.9 FM, Kaya FM, 702 and Cape Talk.

His experience extends beyond broadcasting into government and strategic communications. He has served as spokesperson to the Western Cape MEC for Transport and Public Works, spokesperson to the Minister of Public Works, and Communications Manager at South African Tourism.

Koketso is the founder of House of Sachane, a strategic narrative, media and dialogue practice focused on storytelling, public discourse, culture and meaningful conversation.

3. Company Profile

HOUSE OF SACHANE

House of Sachane is a strategic narrative, media and dialogue practice founded by broadcaster, journalist and storyteller Koketso Sachane.

It exists at the intersection of storytelling, public affairs, broadcasting, culture and conversation.

The central proposition is simple:

The quality of our conversations influences the quality of the society we build.

House of Sachane creates and facilitates conversations that move beyond headlines to explore the ideas, experiences and human stories underneath them.

Its work spans:

Dialogue & Facilitation

High-level moderation, facilitation, public dialogue, fireside conversations and stakeholder engagement.

Storytelling & Narrative

Narrative development, long-form conversations, audio storytelling and strategic storytelling.

Thought Leadership

Keynotes, public intellectual conversations and curated platforms around issues shaping South Africa.

Culture & Live Experiences

Original live formats that bring together music, literature, history, ideas and conversation.

House of Sachane works across the corporate, government, civil society, academic, media and cultural sectors.

Its distinctive capability comes from combining more than two decades of broadcasting and journalism with strategic communications experience and a deep understanding of how people respond to stories.

House of Sachane is ultimately interested in one thing:

Creating spaces where people don't simply hear more — they listen differently.

4. Areas of expertise

4.1 The South African Story

Who tells South Africa's story, whose voices are included, and what narratives shape how we understand ourselves?

4.2 Leadership & Citizenship

What does leadership mean in a democracy, and what responsibilities do citizens, institutions and leaders have to one another?

4.3 Media & Democracy

The role of journalism, broadcasting, social media and public discourse in shaping democratic societies.

4.4 The Power of Conversation

Listening, disagreement, empathy, difficult conversations and dialogue as tools for rebuilding trust.

4.5 Culture, Identity & Memory

How music, literature, history, art and storytelling shape individual and collective identity.

4.6 The Next Generation

Intergenerational responsibility, youth, memory and the stories we choose to pass on.

5. Speaking topics

5.1 WHO SHAPES THE SOUTH AFRICAN STORY?

The keynote signature

South Africa is constantly being narrated — by politicians, journalists, business leaders, activists, artists, academics and citizens.

But who actually owns the story?

Koketso explores the relationship between narrative, power, identity and democracy, asking who gets to define the country, whose voices are amplified and what responsibility we carry for the stories we leave behind.

Audience takeaway:

Participants are challenged to recognise themselves not merely as consumers of South Africa's story, but as participants in its creation.

5.2 BEYOND THE HEADLINES: THE CONVERSATIONS WE ARE NOT HAVING

Every day we are surrounded by information. Yet information does not necessarily produce understanding.

Drawing on more than two decades in broadcasting, Koketso explores what happens when we move beyond the immediate news cycle and begin asking better questions about context, consequence and meaning.

Audience takeaway:

A framework for moving from reaction to reflection — and from consuming information to engaging meaningfully with the world around us.

5.3 CAN WE STILL TALK TO ONE ANOTHER?

Democracy requires disagreement. But disagreement without listening becomes division. This keynote examines the crisis of conversation in an increasingly polarised society and asks what it would take to rebuild the ability to disagree without dehumanising one another.

Audience takeaway:

Practical insights into listening, empathy, disagreement and dialogue as leadership and citizenship capabilities.

5.4 THE STORIES WE LEAVE BEHIND

Every generation inherits a story.

It then decides what to preserve, what to challenge and what to change.

This keynote examines memory, history, intergenerational responsibility and the question of what today's South Africans are handing to those who come after us.

Audience takeaway:

A powerful invitation to think beyond immediate success and consider the narratives, values and possibilities we leave behind.

5.5 LISTENING IS A LEADERSHIP ACT

We have become very good at speaking.

We have become considerably less good at listening.

Koketso explores listening not as passive behaviour but as an active form of leadership — one that enables leaders and institutions to understand people before attempting to lead them.

Audience takeaway:

A new understanding of listening as a strategic leadership capability, particularly in complex and changing environments.
